Sarajevo pop rock scena (1980-1992)
Sarajevo Pop Rock Scene

Iako se najčešće govori o sarajevskoj rock sceni i sarajevskoj rock školi tu ne smijemo biti žanrovski isključivi. Značajni stvaraoci se pojavljuju i u oblasti pop i zabavne muzike, čak i šlagera i takozvanog etno popa.

Zdravko Čolić je tokom osamdesetih pokušavao da uhvati svjetske trendove pa je snimao albume i u rockabilly stilu i priklanjao se novom romantizmu, pa čak i etno popu. Uz njega najveća pjevačka muška zvijezda u Jugoslaviji bio je Seid Memić Vajta. Pogotovo na samom početku decenije. Prva tri solo albuma su mu bili mega uspješni, a 1981. godine upravo sa Vajtom se Jugoslavija vratila na Eurosong.

Kemal Monteno je nastavio uspješnu karijeru, kao i Jadranka Stojaković, Goran Kovačević, a posebno je Neda Ukraden postala vrlo tražena i tiražna pjevačica. Sabina Varešanović je, zanimljivo, tek sredinom osamdesetih objavila prvi album. U drugoj polovini osamdesetih Senad od Bosne je doživio vrhunac karijere sa hitovima "Jasmina" i "Bistre vode Bosnom teku". Nakon jedinog albuma iz 1980. godine Ambasadori su prestali sa radom, a njihov posljednji pjevač Hari Varešanović je pokrenuo grupu Hari Mata Hari i postao izrazito uspješan.

Hari Mata Hari su pripadali onoj plejadi novih bendova koji su svako malo stizali iz Sarajeva i postizali veliku popularnost širom Jugoslavije. Redom su to bili Valentino 1983. godine, pa "novi primitivizam" godinu dana kasnije. Zatim Plavi orkestar, Merlin i Hari Mata Hari 1985., te Crvena jabuka 1986. godine. Uz njih su stizali Bolero, Gino banana, Detektor laži, Bambinosi, Maratonci, Gorki šećer, Rulet Bugi, Soko, Mona Liza, Boja ruže, Crno vino, Lucky Lak, Manila, Kotrljajuće kamenje, Staklena zvona i slični. Svakako je zanimljiva i zenička grupa Nemoguće vruće koja je krajem 1987. godine imala zanimljiv debi album. Odlaskom glavnog autora i pjevača iz te grupe nastala je grupa Ritam srca koja je također ostavila samo jedan album sa pjesmama na tragu Crvene jabuke.

Od novih imena se početkom osamdesetih pojavljuje Mugdim Avdić Henda. U stvaraoce sa sarajevske scene možemo uvrstiti i Crnogorca Miladina Šobića. On je u Sarajevu početkom osamdesetih uradio jedina dva albuma i objavio ih za Diskoton. Osamdesetih se pojavila i grupa Papiga koju je predvodio Zlatan Fazlić Fazla, jedan od najcjenjenijih autora u regionu.

Krajem osamdesetih i početkom devedesetih godina se javljaju novi sastavi kao što su Mjesečari na primjer, koji će tokom ratnih godina dvije godine zaredom biti proglašeni grupom godine u Bosni i Hercegovini.

Značajan doprinos razvoju zabavnomuzičke scene dao je festival "Vaš šlager sezone" koji je bio redovan tokom prvih godina osamdesetih da bi se nakon kraće pauze vratio 1987. i 1988. godine, a onda zamro do dva nova pokušaja tokom devedesetih da bi se posve ugasio. Na festivalu su se 1988. godine pojavile Amila Čengić (kasnije Glamočak) i Lejla Trto. One su do tada bile poznate kao najtraženiji duo pratećih vokala, a tada su pokušale sa solo karijerom. Krajem osamdesetih i početkom devedesetih svoju karijeru, uglavnom pop usmjerenja, nastavljaju i dva nekadašnja pjevača Bijelog dugmeta, Željko Bebek i Alen Islamović.

Although the Sarajevo Rock Scene and the "Sarajevo Rock School" are most often talked about, it is important to not have too narrow of an understanding of the genre. Significant performers also appeared in the fields of pop and entertainment music, hit music and so-called "ethno-pop".

During the 1980s, Zdravko Čolić was trying to follow global trends and recorded some albums in the rockabilly style, followed by the new romanticism and even ethno-pop style. Along with Čolić, Seid Memić Vajta was the biggest male singing star in Yugoslavia, especially at the beginning of the decade. His first three solo albums were very popular, and in 1981, it was with Vajta that Yugoslavia rejoined the Eurosong contest.

Kemal Monteno continued his successful career, as did Jadranka Stojaković and Goran Kovačević, while the sought-after singer Neda Ukraden had a huge number of musical releases. Sabina Varešanović released her first album in the mid-1980s. In the second half of the decade, Senad od Bosne reached the peak of his career with hits "Jasmina," and "Bistre vode Bosnom teku" ("Clear Waters Run through Bosnia"). Ambasadori stopped working following the release of their only album. Their last singer Hari Varešanović formed a new band, Hari Mata Hari, and became extremely popular.

Hari Mata Hari belonged to the constellation of new bands that appeared in Sarajevo that achieved great popularity across Yugoslavia. Chronologically, it included Valentino in 1983 and then the bands of the "new primitivism" movement in 1984. Next was Plavi Orkestar (Blue Orchestra), Merlin and Hari Mata Hari in 1985, and Crvena Jabuka (Red Apple) in 1986. Along with them came Bolero, Gino Banana, Detektot Laži (Lie Detector), Bambinosi (Kids), Maratonci (Marathon Runners), Gorki Šećer (Bitter Sugar), Rulet Bugi, Soko (Falcon), Mona Liza (Mona Lisa), Boja Ruže (Color of a Rose), Crno Vino (Red Wine), Lucky Lak, Manila, Kotrljajuće Kamenje (Rolling Stones), Staklena Zvona (Glass Bells), and so on. A band from Zenica, Nemoguće Vruće (Impossibly Hot) had a noteworthy debut album at the end of 1987.

In the early 1980s, Mugdim Avdić Henda appeared among the new names. Montenegrin Miladin Šobić can also be included in the authors of the Sarajevo scene. He recorded his only two albums in the early 1980s in Sarajevo for the Diskoton record label. The band Papiga (Parrot), led by Zlatan Fazlić Fazla, one of the most respected authors from the region, appeared in the 1980s as well.

In the late 1980s and early 1990s, new bands emerged, such as Mjesečari (Sleepwalkers), who were declared the group of the year in Bosnia and Herzegovina for two years in a row during the war period.

A significant contribution to the development of the entertainment music scene was made by the festival "Vaš Šlager Sezone" ("Your Biggest Hit of the Season"), which ran regularly during the early 1980s, then resumed in 1987 and 1988 after a short break, but later paused once again. The concept came to an end following two additional attempts to revitalize it in the 1990s. Amila Čengić (later Glamočak) and Lejla Trto appeared at the festival in 1988. Until then, they were known as the most wanted backup vocal duo, and they then each tried solo careers. In the late 1980s and early 1990s, two former singers of Bijelo Dugme, Željko Bebek and Alen Islamović, continued their careers, moving mainly in a pop direction.
