Plavi orkestar

Plavi orkestar je bio najveća tinejdžerska atrakcija sredine osamdesetih godina. Sa prvim albumom Soldatski bal i mega hitom "Suada" naprečac su osvojili Jugoslaviju. Priča o njima, međutim, počinje onoga trenutka kada sedamnaestogodišnji gimnazijalac Saša Lošić 1981. godine osniva Ševin orkestar. Sa njim je u sastavu već tada bubnjar Admir Ćeramida i ta će saradnja potrajati i narednih četrdeset godina. Već naredne godine mijenjaju ime u Plavi orkestar, a kada Lošić pređe u Prvu sarajevsku gimnaziju tamo upoznaje Mladena Pavičića čovjeka koji je imao već poprilično iskustva na rock sceni.

On, kao iskusan muzičar, unosi novine u rad grupe, ali prije svega traži promjene u sastavu. Ubrzo pod pritiskom iz grupe odlaze i gitarista i basista, a Pava se sjeti bas gitariste Samira Ćeramide sa kojim je kratko vrijeme svirao u grupi Elvis J. Kurtovich. Njega nije trebalo puno nagovarati da se priključi grupi u kojoj već svira njegov brat blizanac i 1983. godine Plavi orkestar je u najpoznatijem sastavu. Početkom 1985. godine u Zagrebu su snimili prvi album na kojem su gostovale brojne tadašnje jugoslovenske zvijezde. Pored Husa koji radi produkciju tu su Aki Rahimovski, Jura Stublić, Marina Perazić, Peđa D' Boy, Massimo Savić, Nada Obrić, a bubnjeve je svirao Ivan Fece Firči, tadašnji član «Ekatarine velike».

Kada se album u proljeće 1985. pojavio izazvao je masovnu histeriju. Za svega četiri mjeseca prodato je preko 300.000 primjeraka i to je, zvanično, postao najprodavaniji debi album domaće pop rock muzike. Kasnije je ta cifra dobrano prešla pola miliona primjeraka. Album je nosio monstruozno velike hitove kao što su "Suada", "Bolje biti pijan nego star", i "Goodbye teens".

Novi LP Soldatski bal je nastao 1986. godine pod snažnim uticajem njihovog menadžera koji ih je nagovorio da naprave provokativnu ploču konceptualnog usmjerenja i promovišu pokret "new partisans". Kritičari su album sasjekli, a i publika im je, dobrim dijelom, okrenula leđa. Sledećim albumom su pokušali da vrate poljuljane pozicije. Ploča se pojavlia početkom ljeta 1989. godine i prvobitno se trebala zvati Daj nam sunca. Međutim, dežurni cenzori u «Jugotonu» ospore taj naziv zato što je, po njima, asocirao da živimo u mraku i da nemamo dovoljno sunca i da to može poprimiti političke konotacije. A zapravo radilo se o naslovu jedne od pjesama sa albuma, tačnije o prepjevu pjesme "Let the sunshine in" iz mjuzikla Kosa. I album dobije dosta neutralan naziv Sunce na prozoru. Najavio ga je singl sa pjesmom "Proljeće", ali se kao najveći hit ubrzo izdvojila "Kaja". Redale su se "Ti si moja sudbina", "Lovac i košuta", "Ne mogu ti ništa osim srca dati" i bilo je jasno da se Orkestar vratio uspješnoj formuli sa prvog albuma.

U proljeće 1991. godine pojavio se četvrti album Simpatija. Početkom rata Loša se seli u Ljubljanu gdje se bavi dizajnom. Radi pjesme za Šerbedžiju, Crvenu jabuku, Severinu, i za film Autsajder. Godine 1997.godine sa njegovom pjesmom slovenačka glumica Tanja Ribič (inače druga žena Branka Đurića Đure) predstavlja Sloveniju na izboru za Pjesmu Evrovizije. Usput razmišlja i o grupi i u jesen 1997. godine je reaktivirao Plavi orkestar, ali bez Pave koji je tada već u Kanadi. Na koncertima gitare svira Nikša Bratoš, a i na snimanju albuma koji se prvobitno trebao zvati Rapsodija u plavom. Album LP se pojavio u proljeće 1998. godine i predstavio je novog gitaristu Sašu Zalepugina. Ubjedljivo najveći hit je "Ako su to samo bile laži". Sa pjesmom "Šampion" su nastupali marta 1999. godine na izboru za bosanskohercegovačkog predstavnika na Pjesmi EvrovizijeBili su treći iza Hari Mata Harija i Dine Merlina. Ova pjesma je najavila album Beskonačno koji se pojavio krajem te godine. Pjesma "Odlazim" sa njega se popularnošću kod svih generacija opasno približila "Suadi". Loša nije mirovao i uradio je muziku za film Pjera Žalice Gori vatra koju je obeležila tema "Iznad Tešnja zora sviće". Njegovu pjesmu "Malo je malo dana" je otpjevao Halid Bešlić u filmu Kod amidže Idriza. Novi album Sedam se pojavio početkom jeseni 2012. godine.

Plavi orkestar was the biggest teenage sensation of the mid-eighties. With the first album Soldatski bal and the mega hit "Suada" they conquered the country. Their story, however, began in 1981, when seventeen-year-old high school student Saša Lošić founded the band, Ševin orkestar. Drummer Admir Ćeramida was already in the band, and this collaboration would continue and span the next forty years. The following year they changed their name to Plavi orkestar, and when Lošić transferred to Sarajevo's First Gymnasium (high school), he met Mladen Pavičić (Pava), a man who already had considerable experience on the rock scene.

As an experienced musician, he brought innovations to the group's work, but above all he sought changes in the lineup. Soon after, under pressure, the guitarist and the bassist left the group, and Pava remembered the bass guitarist Samir Ćeramide, with whom he played for a short time in the group Elvis J. Kurtovich. He didn't need much persuasion to join the group in which his twin brother was already playing, and in 1983, Plavi orkestar gathered its best-known lineup. At the beginning of 1985, they recorded their first album in Zagreb, on which numerous Yugoslav stars of the time made guest appearances. In addition to Hus, who produced the album, Aki Rahimovski, Jura Stublić, Marina Perazić, Peđa D'Boy, Massimo Savić, Nada Obrić all appear on the album, and the drums were played by Ivan Fece Firči, a member of Ekatarina Velika at the time.

When the album appeared in the spring of 1985, it caused mass hysteria. In just four months, over 300,000 copies were sold, and it officially became the best-selling debut album of domestic pop-rock music. Later, that number exceeded half a million copies. The album included huge hits such as "Suada", "Bolje biti pijan nego star " ("It's Better to be Drunk than Old"), and "Goodbye teens".

The LP Soldatski bal was created in 1986 under the strong influence of their manager, who persuaded them to make a provocative album with a conceptual orientation and promote the "new partisans" movement. Critics decimated the album, and the audience, for the most part, turned their backs on them. With the next album, they tried to regain their shaken position. The record appeared at the beginning of the summer of 1989 and was originally supposed to be called Daj nam sunca (Give us Sun). However, the censors at Jugoton disputed that name because, according to them, it suggested that they were living in the dark which could have had political connotations. In actual fact, this was merely the title of one of the songs from the album, more precisely a cover of the song "Let the sunshine in" from the musical Hair. So, the album ended up with a rather neutral name Sunce na prozoru (Sun on the Window). It was introduced by the single "Proljeće" ("Spring"), but "Kaja" soon stood out as the biggest hit. "Ti si moja sudbina" ("You are my Destiny"), " Lovac i košuta" ("The Hunter and the Hind"), "and Ne mogu ti ništa osim srca" ("I Can't Do anything for you Except my Heart") followed, and it was clear that Orkestar had returned to the successful formula of their first album.

In the spring of 1991, the fourth album Simpatija was released. At the beginning of the war, Loša moved to Ljubljana, where he worked in design. He writes songs for Šerbedžija, Crvena jabuka, Severina, and for the film Autsajder. In 1997, singing his song, Slovenian actress Tanja Ribič (the second wife of Branko Đurić Đuro) represented Slovenia at the Eurovision Song Contest. Along the way, he also thought about the band, and in the autumn of 1997 he reactivated Plavi orkestar, but without Pava, who had already gone to Canada. Nikša Bratoš plays the guitar at concerts, as well as during the recording of the album, which was originally supposed to be called Rapsodija u plavom (Rhapsody in Blue). The album LP appeared in the spring of 1998 and introduced the new guitarist Saša Zalepugin. By far the biggest hit was "Ako su to samo bile laži" (If it Was All Only Just Lies"). They performed the song "Šampion" ("Champion") in March 1999 at the selection for Bosnia and Herzegovina's representative at the Eurovision Song Contest. They were third behind Hari Mata Hari and Dino Merlin. This song announced the album Beskonačno (Infinitely), which appeared at the end of that year. The song "Odlazim" ("I'm Leaving") came dangerously close to "Suada" in terms of popularity among all generations. Loša did not sit still, composing the music for Pjer Žalica's film Gori Vatra (The Fire is Burning), which was marked by the theme song "Iznad Tešnja zora sviće" ("Abve Tešanj, Dawn is Breaking"). His song "Malo je malo dana" ("It's a Short Day") was sung by Halid Bešlić in the film Kod amidže Idriza (At Uncle Idriz's). The new album Sedam ("Seven") was released at the beginning of autumn 2012.
