Pop rock Zdravko Čolić

Čak je i Zdravko Čolić promijenio stil i muzički izraz na albumu Malo pojačaj radio iz 1982. godine. Bregović biva glavni supervizor tog albuma koji je trebao da bude trendovski. Zanimljivo je da je uz reklamnu kampanju ovog albuma vezan i prvi Čolićev skandal. Naime, reklamni video spot prikazivao je vojnike bez oznaka kako zakopavaju radio koji nakon toga eksplodira i ide reklamna poruka sljedeće sadržine: "nova diverzija Zdravka Čolića, album Malo pojačaj radio". I sam Čolić se prvi put okušao kao autor u dvije pjesme. Sa albumom Šta mi radiš iz 1983. godine ponovo se potpuno okreće Korneliju Kovaču i novim autorima. Snima ga u Španiji i pokušava da se uključi u vladajući trend novog romantizma. To nije baš Čolićev fah i najsnažniji momenat ploče je staroromantičarska balada "Stanica Podlugovi" koju je napisao autor "Selme" Vlado Dijak. Početkom proljeća 1985. godine pojavljuje se njegov album Ti si mi u krvi na kome ponovo nema Bregovića, ali na kojem radi standardna ekipa okupljena oko Kornelija Kovača, a u sve se uključuju sa po jednom pjesmom Bajaga i Đorđe Balašević. Ovaj album označio je priklanjanje Čolića zvuku koji već opasno koketira sa folk muzikom i u tom smislu najkarakterističnija je uvodna pjesma "Ruška".

Čolić nije iskoristio komercijalni zamah albuma. U to vrijeme živi u Zagrebu i u jednoj saobraćajnoj nesreći na ulicama Zagreba biva teže povrijeđen i liječenje ga odvaja od scene na duže vrijeme. U međuvremenu je završio ekonomski fakultet u Sarajevu i krenuo u privatni biznis proizvodnjom dijelova za telefoniju. Repromaterijal nabavlja iz inostranstva za devize, a nabavka deviza je, u to vrijeme, gotovo nemoguća legalnim putem. On 1987.godine odlazi u Ohrid kako bi na crnom tržištu kupio veću količinu deviza i tom prilikom biva uhapšen i osuđen zbog nečega što je u tom momentu, u manjoj ili većoj mjeri, činilo preko 90% Jugoslovena.

U takvoj atmosferi nastaje i njegov naredni album Zdravko Čolić, objavljen početkom 1988. godine. Album je simbolično trebao pokazati kako predstavlja novi početak za njega. Pokušao je da proširi krug saradnika svježim, mladim autorima. Pored već oprobanih Kovača i Montena pjesme mu rade Saša Lošić, pokojni Neša Radulović (lider grupe Posljednja igra leptira) i Igor Ivanović (tada član grupe Uhuhu, a kasnije Crvene jabuke).

Činilo se da će nakon ove ploče Čolić i definitivno napustiti estradni posao. A u skladu sa tim očekivanjima se u naredne dvije i po godine potpuno povukao sa scene.1990. izdaje album Da ti kažem šta mi je. Otprilike u to vrijeme, ranih 90tih, Čolić već živi u Beogradu i kada dođe do rata u Bosni i Hercegovini on se potpuno povlači iz javnosti. Na scenu se vratio 1997. godine i od tada kontinuirano snima albume.

Even Zdravko Čolić changed his style and musical expression on the album Malo pojačaj radio (Turn the Radio Up) from 1982. Bregović was the chief supervisor of this album which was supposed to have tapped into the trends of that time. What's interesting is that the promo campaign for this album was linked to Čolić's first public scandal. The promo video clip featured soldiers bearing no insignia burying a radio set which then proceeded to explode, followed by a promotional message that read as follows: "a new diversion by Zdravko Čolić, album Malo pojačaj radio". Čolić himself debuted as a songwriter of two of the songs.

On the album Šta mi radiš (What are you Doing to Me) from 1983 he turned once again to Kornelije Kovač and new songwriters. It was recorded in Spain and aimed to jump onto the reigning bandwagon of new romanticism. This wasn't Čolić's forte, and the most powerful moment on the LP is an old romantic ballad titled "Stanica Podlugovi" ("Podlugova Station") written by the author of "Selma," Vlado Dijak. In the early spring of 1985, a new album titled Ti si mi u krvi (You're in my Blood) is released, once again not featuring Bregović, but on which the standard team gathered around Kornelije Kovač, as well as Bajaga and Đorđe Balašević, join in with one song each. This album marked Čolić's approach to a sound that already dangerously flirts with folk music, and in this sense, the opening song "Ruška" is the most characteristic representative of that genre.

Čolić did not exploit the album's commercial success. At the time, he was living in Zagreb and had sustained serious injuries in a car crash, and his treatment took him off the scene for a considerable amount of time. In the meantime, he graduated from the Faculty of Economics in Sarajevo and started his own business manufacturing parts for telephone equipment. He procure materials from abroad for hard currency, as acquiring hard currency was, at that time, almost impossible legally. In 1987 he went to Ohrid to acquire a large amount of hard currency on the black market, and on that occasion, he was arrested and convicted for something that at the time, to a greater or lesser extent, was done by over 90% of Yugoslavs.

His next album Zdravko Čolić, released in early 1988, was created against this backdrop. The album was supposed to symbolize a new beginning for him. He tried to broaden his circle of collaborators by introducing fresh, young songwriters. In addition to the tried-and-tested Kovač and Monteno, his songs were written by Saša Lošić, the late Neša Radulović (frontman of Posljednja igra leptira), and Igor Ivanović (at the time member of Uhuhu, and later Crvena jabuka).

It seemed that after this LP Čolić would definitely leave the scene. And in fact, in the next two and a half years he completely retired from the scene. In 1990, he released the album Da Ti Kažem Šta Mi Je. At around that time in the early 1990s, Čolić was already living in Belgrade, and when war broke out in Bosnia and Herzegovina, he completely withdrew from the public eye. He returned to the scene in 1997 and has been continuously recording albums since then.
