Gino Banana

Gino banana – Grupu je početkom osamdesetih okupio pjevač Srđan Jevđević. Dugo vremena su ih, pogrešno, smatrali pripadnicima "novog primitivizma" sve do pojave prvog albuma Gino banana iz 1986. godine. Album je imao hitove "Odvedi me u Diznilend" i "Daj da popijem". Autori materijala bili su Srđan Jevđević (alter ego Gino Banana) i Igor Ivanović (gitara). Bas je svirao Branko Sauka, a bubnjeve Ademir Volić Kufi. I Ivanović i Sauka će se nekoliko godina kasnije naći u Crvenoj jabuci. Album je relativno dobro prošao, pa je nadmašio očekivanja Diskotona i naredna ploča se ambicioznije pripremala.

Drugi album Ne daj me tuđim ljudima se pojavio 1987. godine. Na njemu je njihov najveći hit "Mače moje čupavo". U nekim pjesmama poput "Kosovka djevojka" koristili su i Šekspirove stihove. Igor Ivanović ih je tada već napustio da bi osnovao grupu Uhuhu. Novi gitarista Slaven Vulić je sa Jevđevićem podijelio autorstvo na albumu. Novi bubnjar je postao Neša Đuričić a Kufi je otišao u Valentino. Dvije godine kasnije izlazi album Amerika sa kojeg se izdvajaju naslovna i pjesma "U plavim očima". Tada su u grupi još samo Jevđević i Vulić. U pjesmi "O sole mio" gostovala je operna diva Gertruda Munitić.

Tokom ratnih godina Jevđević je posebno aktivan. Jedan je od ključnih aktera sarajevske postave mjuzikla "Kosa". Krajem rata odlazi u Seattle. Uključuje se na tamošnju izuzetno jaku rock scenu i na koncertima je na početku uglavnom izvodio bosanske sevdalinke i tradicionalnu balkansku muziku. Osnovao je sastav Kultur Shock koji je punk, hard core i metal kombinovao sa etno uticajima balkanske muzike. Među članovima je bilo Bosanaca, Japanaca, Amerikanaca, Indonežana i Bugara. Sebe definišu kao koncertni band sastavljem od "plavi okovratnik imigranata". Objavili su osam studijskih i dva koncertna albuma.

Hari Mata Hari

Hari Mata Hari – Grupu je osnovao jedan od najtalentovanijih sarajevskih i izvođača i autora Hajrudin Hari Varešanović. Prvi put je zapažen kao pjevač grupe Zov. Zatim je prešao u Ambasadore, a potom je nastavio pod vlastitim imenom. Kao Hari Varešanović objavio je album Zadnja rupa na svirali koji je loše prošao iako je imao hit "Kupiću ti zlatne kočije'.

Zatim se udružio sa grupom Baobab i formirao sastav Hari Mata Hari. Prvi album je pokazao da imaju svježih ideja ali produkcijski to nije dovedeno do kraja. Tek pokušaj da odu na Evroviziju sa pjesmom "U tvojoj kosi" donosi im prvi pravi hit. Naredni album Ne bi te odbranila ni cijela Jugoslavija iz 1986. godine predstavlja značajan korak naprijed, a grupa postaje kompaktna cjelina u kojoj se pored Varešanovića autorskim radovima izdvaja Edo Mulahalilović. Uz Harija i Edu u grupi su bubnjar Izo Kolečić i basista Neno Jeleč. Treći, prelomni album Ja te volim najviše na svijetu se pojavio u proljeće 1988. godine. U pjesmi "17 godina" gostovala je tada nepoznata Tatjana Matejaš Tajči. Pridružio im se klavijaturista Adi Mulahalilović čiji je brat Edo već svirao sa njima. Umjesto Nene Jeleča basista je postao Željko Zuber. Na tom albumu prvi put sarađuju sa tekstopiscem Fahrudinom Pecikozom koji će u narednih 26 godina biti neraskidivo vezan za rad ove grupe.

Popularnost im tada naglo raste i interes tržišta koriste da naredne godine ponude još bolji album Volio bih da te ne volim, a naslovna pjesma postaje veliki hit. Karijera im početkom devedesetih nastavlja ići uzlaznom putanjom i album Strah me da te volim iz 1990. godine dovodi ih na mjesto najpopularnijeg pop sastava. Krajem 1991. godine su na "Mesamu" u Beogradu promovisali album Ti rođena si za mene koju je najavio duet sa Harisom Džinovićem u pjesmi "Ja ne pijem".

Sa početkom rata Hari je sa porodicom otišao u Skandinaviju gdje je radio kao kompozitor i producent. Album Ostaj mi zbogom ljubavi objavio je 1994. godine. U Sarajevo se vraća 1997. godine i objavljuje album Ja nemam snage da te ne volim. Početkom 1999. godine pozvan je da uzme učešća na izboru domaćeg predstavnika za Pjesmu Evrovizije. Nakon glasanja tv studija jasno je da je njegova pjesma "Starac i more" pobjednik. Međutim zbog prijetnje diskvalifikacijom Televizija Bosne i hercegovine u Izrael ipak šalje Dinu Merlina. Tek 2001. godine grupa Hari Mata Hari vraća nekadašnje pozicije sa albumom Baš ti lijepo stoje suze. Album Zakon jačega objavio je u ljeto 2004. godine. Vrhunac karijere doživljavaju nastupom na „Pjesmi Evrovizije" 2006. godine sa pjesmom "Lejla". Postižu najveći uspjeh Bosne i Hercegovine osvajanjem trećeg mjesta u Atini. Početkom ljeta 2009. izašao je album Sreća, a 2016. godine objavljen je album pod nazivom Ćilim.

Milly the Kid

Milly the Kid – Grupa koja je trebala predstavljati jednu od prejanica sarajevske scene u devedestim. Objavili su album Milly the Kid sa hitovima "Dirlidada", "Da me ne zaboraviš", "Ko sad pit usne tvoje". Rat je prekinuo i njihovu kao i mnoge druge karijere. Zanimljivo je da je grupu predvodio Aleksandar Milić Milly koji će kasnije osnovati vrlo uspješnu grupu Miligram i steći veliku popularnost kao autor nekih od najvećih hitova narodne muzike.

Edo Mulahalilović

Edo Mulahalilović – Kao devetnaestogodišnjak odluči da se okuša u vodama pop rock muzike i osnovao je grupu Baobab. Ovu grupu je osnovao zajedno sa Pjerom Žalicom i Izudinom Kolečićem. Oni će se kasnije pridružiti Hariju Varešanoviću (ili on njima, svejedno) i nastala je grupa Hari Mata Hari. Edo je bio autor nekih od njihovih najvećih hitova ove grupe. Nakon albuma Strah me da te volim sredinom 1991.godine Edo je napustio grupu i odlučio da se okuša kao solista. Snimio je album Jedna je pjesma cijelog života. Nakon toga je, sa bratom Adijem, radio pjesme za brojne uspješne izvođače. Nakon teške bolesti preminuo je u Beogradu 27. 6. 2010. godine.

Gino banana – The band was formed in the early eighties by singer Srđan Jevđević. For a long time, they were mistakenly considered members of the new primitivism movement, up until the release of their first album Gino banana in 1986. The album contained hits including, "Odvedi me u Diznilend" (Take me to Disneyland"), and "Daj da popijem} ("Let me Drink"). The material was co-authored by Srđan Jevđević (alter ego Gino Banana), and Igor Ivanović (guitar). Branko Sauka played bass guitar, with Ademir Volić Kufi on drums. Both Ivanović and Sauka would join Crvena jabuka a few years later. The album had a relatively good reception, surpassing its label Diskoton's expectations, so the following album was prepared in a more ambitious manner.

The second album Ne daj me tuđim ljudima (Don't give me to strange/foreign people) came out in 1987. It includes their greatest hit "Mače moje čupavo" ("My Fluffy Kitten"). In some songs, such as "Kosovka djevojka" ("Kosovo Girl"), they used verses from Shakespeare. By that point, Igor Ivanović had already left to form another band - Uhuhu. New guitarist Slaven Vulić co-authored the album with Jevđevićem. Neša Đuričić became their new drummer, and Kufi left to join Valentino. Two years later, their album Amerika was released with notable songs being the title track and "U plavim očima" ("In Blue Eyes"). Jevđević and Vulić were the only remaining members of the band. The song "O sole mio" features opera singer Gertruda Munitić.

During war years, Jevđević was especially active. He was one of the key actors in Sarajevo's cast of the musical Hair. By the end of the war, he had moved to Seattle. He joined the extremely robust rock scene there, playing interpretations of Bosnian sevdah and traditional Balkan music at concerts. He formed the band Kultur Shock combining punk, hard core and metal with ethnic elements of Balkan music. Band members are Bosnian, Japanese, American, Indonesian, and Bulgarian. They describe themselves as a concert band composed of "blue collar immigrants". They've released eight studio and two live albums.

Hari Mata Hari – This group was founded by one of Sarajevo's most talented performers and authors, Hajrudin Hari Varešanović. He initially attracted notice as the singer of the group Zov. He then switched to Ambasadori, and then continued under his own name. As Hari Varešanović, he released the album Zadnja rupa na svirali (■The Last Hole being Played) which did poorly even though it contained the hit "Kupiću ti zlatne kočije " ("I Will Buy You Golden Chariots").

He then teamed up with the group Baobab and formed the band Hari Mata Hari. The first album showed that they have fresh ideas, but in terms of production, something was missing. Only their attempt to go to Eurovision with the song "U tvojoj kosi" ("In Your Hair") resulted in their first real hit. The next album "Ne bi te odbranila ni cijela Jugoslavija" ("Not even the whole of Yugoslavia would defend you") from 1986 was a significant step forward, and the group became a compact unit in which, in addition to Varešanović, Edo Mulahalilović stood out with his original song writing skills. Along with Hari and Edo, the group included drummer Izo Kolečić and bassist Neno Jeleč. The third, ground-breaking album Ja te volim najviše na svijetu (I Love you the Most in the World) appeared in the spring of 1988. Tatjana Matejaš Tajči, unknown at the time, made a guest appearance in the song "17 godina" ("17 Years"). They were joined by keyboardist Adi Mulahalilović, whose brother Edo was already playing with them. Željko Zuber became the bass player replacing Neno Jeleč. On that album, they collaborated with the songwriter Fahrudin Pecikoza for the first time, and he would be inextricably linked to the work of this group for the next 26 years.

Their popularity then grew rapidly, and they used the gap in the market to offer an even better album, Volio bih da te ne volim (I Wish that I Didn't Love You) the following year, and the title song became a big hit. At the beginning of the nineties, their career was on rise and the album "Strah me da te volim" ("It Frightens Me that I Love You") from 1990 gave them the title of the most popular pop group. At the end of 1991, they promoted the album Ti rođena si za mene (Your Were Born for Me) at "Mesam" in Belgrade, which was announced by a duet with Haris Džinović in the song "Ja ne pijem" ("I Don't Drink").

At the beginning of the war, Hari moved to Scandinavia with his family where he worked as a composer and producer. He released the album Ostaj mi zbogom ljubavi (Stay With Me For Love) in 1994. He returned to Sarajevo in 1997 and released the album Ja nemam snage da te volim (I Don't Have the Strength to Love You). At the beginning of 1999, he was invited to take part in the selection of the BiH representative for the Eurovision Song Contest. After votes were cast by the TV studio representatives, it became clear that his song "Starac i more" ("The Old Man and the Sea") had won. However, due to a risk of disqualification, Dino Merlin was sent to Israel to perform instead. It was not until 2001 that the group Hari Mata Hari regained its former position with the album Baš ti lijepo stoje suze (Your Tears are so Beautiful). He released the album Zakon jačega (The Law of the Stronger) in the summer of 2004. The peak of their career was their performance at the Eurovision Song Contest in 2006 with the song "Lejla". They achieved Bosnia and Herzegovina's greatest success by placing third in Athens. At the beginning of the summer of 2009, the album Sreća (Happiness) was released, and in 2016, an album called Ćilim (Carpet) was released.

Milly the Kid – This band was supposed to represent the pioneers of the Sarajevo scene in the 90s. They released the album Milly the Kid, with the hits "Dirlidada," "Da me ne zaboraviš" ("Don't you forget about me"), and "Ko sad pita usne tvoje" ("Who asks your lips now"). However the war interrupted their careers, as it did many others. It is notable that the group was led by Aleksandar Milić Milly, who would later form the very successful band Miligram, and enjoy great popularity as the author of some of the biggest hits of folk music.

Edo Mulahalilović– As a nineteen-year-old, Edo decided to try his hand at pop rock music and founded the band Baobab. He formed this band together with Pjer Žalica and Izudin Kolečić. They would later join Hari Varešanović (or, rather, he joined them) and the band Hari Mata Hari was born. Edo was the author of some of the band's biggest hits. After the album Strah me da te volim (I am afraid to love you) in mid-1991, Edo left the group and decided to try a solo career. He recorded the album Jedna pjesma cijelog život (One song of an entire lifetime). Then, together with his brother Adi, he worked on songs for many successful artists. After a serious illness, he died in Belgrade on June 27, 2010.
