Novi primitivizam

Music of the New Primitives Movement

Najzanimljiviji i najuticajniji rock fenomen u Sarajevu osamdesetih godina bio je "Novi primitivizam". Vjerovatno i najkreativniji. Bio je to autentični domaći odgovor na sve ono što se dešavalo u svijetu krajem sedamdesetih i početkom osamdesetih godina prošloga vijeka. Time je obilato nadoknađeno to što se Sarajevo, nešto kasnije od drugih jugoslovenskih centara, uključilo u Novi talas.

Već početkom osamdesetih godina, formiraju se prvi sastavi nove generacije, koja je ustala protiv svega postojećeg i etabliranog u rock muzici. Nedostatak instrumentalističke virtuoznosti, zamijenila je mladalačka energija i obilje ideja koje su imali da ponude. Junaci njihovih pjesama bili su, zapravo, antijunaci. Bili su to ljudi sa margine društva. Nije bila nimalo rijetka pojava da isti ljudi sviraju u nekoliko „novoprimitivnih" bendova. Kasnije će Davor Sučić primjetiti kako je "bilo devet muzičara u sedam bendova".

Osnovne karakteristike ovog novog muzičkog (i ne samo muzičkog) pravca, ogledale su se u drugačijim temama njihovih pjesama. Prvi su počeli koristiti sleng sarajevskih ulica, a imali su i specifičan način oblačenja, stil koji se odlikovao potpunim odsustvom stila. Za ostatak Jugoslavije mnoge riječi njihovih pjesama bile su posve nepoznate i nerazumljive, pa su na omotima albuma, nerijetko, objavljivali i tumačenje manje poznatih riječi i izraza. I tom prilikom su njihova objašnjenja, sama po sebi, bila krajnje duhovita i u skladu sa duhom pokreta.

Ključni ljudi pokreta su bili Nenad Janković (a.k.a. dr Nele Karajlić), Mirko Srdić (a.k.a. Elvis J Kurtovich), Davor Sučić (a.k.a. Sejo Sexon) i Zenit Đozić (a.k.a Fu–do). I ostali članovi dvije ključne grupe pokreta Elvis J Kurtovich i Zabranjeno pušenje imali su svoje novoprimitivne identitete kao što su Munja Strašni, Rizo, Zijo, Fićo, Seid Little Karajlić, Šeki Gayton, Hare i slično.

Prvi albumi novog primitivizma izlaze 1984. godine, a najvažniji predstavnici ovog pokreta su Elvis J Kurtovich, Zabranjeno pušenje i Bombaj štampa. Bilo je nekih pokušaja i izvan Sarajeva da se krene ovim pravcem i najizrazitiji je primjer grupe Dinar iz Banja Luke. Nakon prvog albuma Elvisa, a posebno nakon prvog albuma Pušenja, cijeli pokret prestaje biti lokalna atrakcija i uslijedilo je aklamativno prihvatanje novog primitivizma širom Jugoslavije.

Izuzetan značaj u razvoju novog primitivizma, odigrala je i petnaestominutna radijska emisija Top lista nadrealista, emitovana subotom u jutarnjim satima. Uprkos posve neatraktivnom terminu, emisija je ubrzo stekla kultni status i doprinijela širenju fame o "nadrealistima" i "novoprimitivcima" po Sarajevu. Kasnije televizijsko izdanje ove emisije pojavilo se u vrijeme kada se za njih već znalo po cijeloj Jugoslaviji, a priroda medija je uslovila i to da moraju, donekle, otupiti oštricu svog humora. U okviru radijske emisije, po prvi put su se mogle čuti neke od njihovih najznačajnijih pjesama kao što su "Kad se babo vrati kući pijan" i "Ćiza vizard."

Najznačajniji period novog primitivizma desio se u godinama od 1984. do 1988. To je vrijeme kada su Elvis i Pušenje objavili svoja tri prva albuma, a Bombaj štampa svoj debi album. Kasnije je Elvis J Kurtovich nove pjesme objavljivao vrlo sporadično, a albumi koje bi i snimili, nisu na pravi način dolazili do publike. Bombaj štampa se poprilično odmakla od izvornog primitivizma, a jedino je Zabranjeno pušenje, manje više dosljedno, nastavilo zacrtanim putem. Novi primitivizam je izvršio značajan uticaj i na neke kasnije sastave izvan Sarajeva i Bosne i Hercegovine, kao što su Hladno pivo i Zaklonište prepeva.

"New Primitivism" was the most interesting and influential phenomenon in Sarajevo in the 1980s – and probably the most creative. It was a unique domestic response to everything that was happening in the world at the end of the 1970s and the beginning of the 1980s. While Sarajevo joined the New Wave scene a bit later than the other Yugoslav centers, this originality made Sarajevo's contribution distinct.

The first bands of this new generation formed at the very beginning of the 1980s. This generation stood up against everything that existed and had been established in rock music until then. They made up for their lack of instrumental virtuosity with their youthful energy and an abundance of ideas. The heroes of their songs were actually anti-heroes – people from the margins of society. It was not uncommon for the same person to play in several "new primitive" bands. Zabranjeno Pušenje's Davor Sučić observed that "there were nine musicians in seven bands."

The basic characteristics of this new (not only) musical direction were reflected in their songs' themes. They were the first to start using the slang of the streets of Sarajevo, and they had a specific way of dressing – characterized by the absolute absence of style. For the rest of Yugoslavia, many of the words in their song lyrics were completely unknown or incomprehensible, so they often published an interpretation of lesser-known words and phrases on their album covers. Even here the explanations they used were extremely witty and in line with the spirit of the movement.

The key figures in the movement were Nenad Janković (a.k.a. dr Nele Karajlić), Mirko Srdić (a.k.a. Elvis J. Kurtovich), Davor Sučić (a.k.a. Sejo Sexon) and Zenit Đozić (a.k.a Fu–do). In addition, other members of the two key bands of the movement – Elvis J. Kurtovich and Zabranjeno pušenje (No Smoking) – adopted new primitive identities such as Munja Strašni, Rizo, Zijo, Fićo, Seid Little Karajlić, Šeki Gayton, Hare, and so on.

The first albums of the New Primitivism were released in 1984, and the most important representatives of this movement were Elvis J. Kurtovich, Zabranjeno pušenje, and Bombaj štampa (Bombay Press). Some artists from outside of Sarajevo were also inspired to follow this direction, the most prominent example of which was the band Dinar from Banja Luka. Following the first album from Elvis, and especially the first album of Pušenje, the entire movement ceased to be merely a local attraction. New Primitivism then gained popularity throughout Yugoslavia.

The fifteen-minute radio show Top lista nadrealista (Top List of the Surrealists), broadcast on Saturday mornings, played an extremely important role in the development of New Primitivism. Despite the completely unattractive broadcast timing, the show soon acquired a cult status and contributed to spreading the fame about the Surrealists and the New Primitives across Sarajevo. By the time the TV edition of this show appeared later, they were already known all over Yugoslavia. But the nature of that medium meant they had to dull the edges of their humor to a degree. Some of their most important songs, such as Kad se babo vrati kući pijan (When Dad Comes Home Drunk) and Ćiza vizard (Ćiza Wizard), were heard for the first time on this radio show.

The most significant flowering of New Primitivism was from 1984 to 1988: Elvis and Pušenje released their first three albums, and Bombaj štampa released their debut album in this period. Later, Elvis J. Kurtovich released new songs sporadically, though the albums they recorded didn't always find their audience. Bombaj štampa moved away from New Primitivism significantly; only Zabranjeno pušenje continued to follow the set path more or less consistently. New Primitivism had a noteworthy impact on some later bands from outside Sarajevo and Bosnia and Herzegovina, such as Croatia's Hladno pivo (Cold Beer) and Slovenia's Zaklonišče prepeva (Bunker Singing).
