ELVIS J. KURTOVICH

Prvobitno su se zvali Elvis J. Spahovich, ali se ispostavilo da u Sarajevu zaista živi čovjek sa tim imenom i prezimenom i kada im je zaprijetio tužbom promijenili su ime u Elvis J. Kurtovich. Jedan od idejnih začetnika benda i pokreta bio je Mirko Srdić koji je uzeo alias Elvis J. Kurtovich. U ekipi su još Davor Sučić Sula (kasnije će osnovati Zabranjeno pušenje, a jedno vrijeme i sam je bio Elvis J. Kurtovich), Dražen Janković (kasnije Seid Little Karajlić, brat Neleta Karajlića), Dražen Ričl (kasnije će osnovati Crvenu jabuku) i Radomir Gavrilović Hare i Goran Petranović Rizo. Posljednja trojica su članovi najčuvenije postave grupe Elvis J. Kurtovich. Ali prije albuma i grupe desili su se medijski izleti na radiju u emisiji Top lista nadrealista. Tu su prvi put izvedene pjesme "Ćiza wizard" i "Baščarši hanumen" (obrada "Honky Tonk Women," The Rolling Stones). "Kad se babo vrati kući pijan" je postala prvi veliki hit grupe, a autor joj je Zlatko Arslanagić, koji će kasnije postati vođa i glavni autor Crvene jabuke. Ove pjesme su i na njihovom prvom albumu Mitovi i legende o kralju Elvisu (1984). Naredni LP Da bog da crk'o rock'n'roll (1985) predstavlja vrhunac njihove karijere. Tu je sublimirana suština novog primitivizma i Elvisa. Naslovna pjesma je ponovo obrada Jagger / Richards klasika. Tu su još "Ljubav je slijepa," "Surfing at Bembasha," "Idol," I "Nosila je ljepotu kao prokletstvo."

Nedugo nakon objavljivanja ovog albuma grupa skoro da prestaje sa radom. Ričl formira Crvenu jabuku. Elvis se posvećuje studiranju, a 1987. godine objavljuje Autobiografiju. Kada se grupa obnovila 1988. godine iz originalne postave su ostali samo Elvis i pjevač Goran Petranović. Sa albuma Čudesni svijet privatluka (1988) vrijedi izdvojiti "Šta da radi insan," "Zašto ljubav boli," "Onaj sa ekrana" (obrada "Highway to hell," AC / DC), "Blues bogatog čovjeka", "Haile Selasije," a u pjesmi "EJK reping" gostovao je Nele Karajlić.

Mirko Srdić je tokom ratnih godina učestvovao u ponovo pokrenutoj Top listi nadrealista. Pridružuje se i obnovljenom Zabranjenom pušenju i autor je nekih najuspješnijih pjesama kao što je "Možeš imat' moje tijelo." Nakon dva studijska i jednog koncertnog albuma napušta i tu grupu. Pjevač Goran Petranović Rizo je u Beogradu obnovio svoju verziju Elvisa J. Kurtovicha. Snimio je album Welcome to the beautiful world of new primitives (2000). Na albumu je ponovio pjesme, "Folk reping," i "EJK reping," a "Guru dedo" je obrada "Across the universe" (The Beatles." Kada mu je pravi Elvis osporio pravo na ime grupu je nazvao Elvis Jr. Kurtovich i objavio je albume Koševo zove (2011) i Put za Gvantanamo (2016). Elvis je snimio album To sam ja ili Neue Bosnishe Kunst, ali on nije na pravi način došao do publike.

Originally, this band was called Elvis J. Spahovich, but it turned out that a man with that name lived in Sarajevo, and when he threatened them with a lawsuit the name was changed to Elvis J. Kurtovich. One of the founders of the band and the movement itself was Mirko Srdić, who took the alias Elvis J. Kurtovich. The group also included Davor Sučić Sula (he would later found Zabranjeno pušenje and, at one time, he was "Elvis J. Kurtovich" himself), Dražen Janković (later known as Seid Little Karajlić, the brother of Nele Karajlić), Dražen Ričl (he would later found Crvena jabuka), Radomir Gavrilović Hare and Goran Petranović Rizo. The last three are members of the most famous lineup of Elvis J. Kurtovich. But before the album and the band, there were some appearances on the radio show Top lista nadrealista. The songs "Ćiza vizard" and "Baščarši hanumen" ("Baščaršija Women)" (a cover of "Honky Tonk Women" by The Rolling Stones) were played there for the first time. "Kad se babo vrati kući pijan" became the band's first big hit, and it was written by Zlatko Arslanagić, who would later become the leader and main songwriter for Crvena jabuka (Red Apple). These songs are also on their first album Mitovi i legende o kralju Elvisu (Myths and Legends of King Elvis) (1984). The next LP, Da bog da crk'o rock'n'roll (God, Let Rock'n'Roll Die) (1985) was the peak of their career. It conveyed the essence of New Primitivism and Elvis. The title track is again a cover of the Jagger/Richards classic. There are also "Ljubav je slijepa (Love is Blind)," "Surfing at Bembaša," "Idol," and "Nosila je ljepotu kao prokletsvo" ("She wore beauty as a curse)."

Shortly after the release of this album, the band almost dissolved. Ričl formed Crvena jabuka. Elvis devoted himself to his studies and, in 1987, he published Autobiography. When the band was reconstituted in 1988, only Elvis and singer Goran Petranović remained from the original line-up. Songs worth mentioning from the album Čudesni svet privatluka (The Wonderful World of Private Business) (1988) include: "Šta da radi insan" ("What Should a Man Do),", "Zašto ljubav boli" ("Why Love Hurts)," "Onaj sa ekrana" ("The One on the Screen)" (a cover of "Highway to Hell" by AC/DC), "Blues bogatog čovjeka" ("Rich Man's Blues)," "Haile Selasije," and "EJK Rapping" where Nele Karajlić appeared as a guest.

During the war years, Mirko Srdić participated in the rebooted Top lista nadrealista. He joined the renewed Zabranjeno pušenje and is also the author of some of the most successful songs, such as "Možeš imat' moje tijelo" ("You Can Only Have My Body)." After two studio albums and one concert album he left the band. The singer Goran Petranović Rizo renewed his version of Elvis J. Kurtovich in Belgrade. He recorded the album Welcome to the Beautiful World of New Primitives (2000). In this album, he repeated the songs "Folk Rapping" and "EJK Rapping", while "Guru dedo (Guru Grandpa)" is a cover of "Across the Universe" by The Beatles. When the real Elvis disputed his rights for the band name, he named the band Elvis Jr. Kurtovich and released the albums Koševo zove (Koševo Calling) (2011) and Put za Gvantanamo (Road to Guantanamo) (2016). Elvis recorded the album To sam ja ili Die Neue Bosnische Kunst (It is Me or The New Bosnian Culture), but it never really reached its audience.
