BOMBAJ ŠTAMPA

Bombaj štampa je grupa nastala u okrilju pokreta novi primitivizam. Prvobitno su se zvali Ševa, i u grupi je pjevao Nedim Babović. Ali kada je iz sastava SCH izbačen Branko Đurić on je prihvaćen u novoj grupi koja mijenja ime u Bombaj štampa. Međutim, Bombaj štampa nije imala ni strpljenja ni upornosti da svoj projekat izgura do albuma sve do 1988 godine. Najveću "krivicu" za to snosi njihov lider i pjevač Branko Đurić Đuro, čiji je pozorišni i filmski angažman usporio rad sa grupom. Do pojave prvog albuma, nazvanog naprosto Bombaj štampa, bili su znani u lokalnim krugovima uglavnom po pjesmama "Željo" i "Džoging kroz Alipašino polje." Pojava prvog albuma bila je osvježenje na sceni. Sa ploče su se odmah izdvojila dva hita "Često poželim" i obrada starog šlagera "Mali motorin." Zanimljivo je da su u grupi bili protiv te pjesme, ali ih je izdavač na kraju ubijedio da je uvrste na ploču. U spomen na pokojnog Dražena Ričla grupa snima njegovu pjesmu "Supermen" nastalu u vrijeme Ričlove saradnje sa grupom Elvis J. Kurtovich. Pored tandema Đuro – Nedo, u grupi su se našli bubnjar Ademir Volić, bas gitarista Neno Jeleč, Nikša Bratoš na klavijaturama, Miroslav Milošević na udaraljkama i duvačka sekcija u sastavu Goran Turkalj, Slobodan Randalović, Nebojša Šogorović i Rusmir Piknjač.

Njihovo pojavljivanje vraća vjeru u čvrsti zvuk, zasnovan na odavanju pošte Rolling Stonesima. Nedo je njihov veliki poklonik, a naredni album Ja bolje letim sam ide čak i korak dalje u tom nastojanju. Na ploči sarađuju sa članovima grupe Psihomodo pop, a Gobac i Đuro zajednički otpjevaju pjesmu "Šarene ulice." Na ploči se ponovo našla jedna Ričlova pjesma, ovoga puta bila je to pjesma "Kćerka jedinica." Bile su tu još, vrijedne pomena, "Da li da," "Bolje letim sam," I "Dubrovački trubaduri." Ovu posljednju kasnije će obraditi Muha band. Na drugom albumu od originalne postave ostali su samo Nedim Babović i Branko Đurić dok su novi članovi bili Dragan Bajić, Zoran Šerbedžija i Srđan Šerbedžija.

Početkom rata snimili su dvije pjesme "Kiša je prošla," i "Ovo je moja zemlja," a onda Đuro zbog zdravstvenih problema odlazi u Sloveniju. Stalni upiti o obnavljanju rada grupe dovedu do toga da oni krajem prve dekade novog milenijuma ponovo počnu povremeno zajedno da sviraju. Grupa se ustalila u postavi u kojoj su od stare ekipe Đurić, Babović i Bajić, a pridružio im se bas gitarista Ernie Mendillo. Uskoro uđu u studio da pripremaju novi album i ta ploča se dosta dugo radila da bi se konačno pojavila u jesen 2010.godine pod nazivom Neka DJ odmah dole CJ. Najavni singlovi bile su pjesme "Truba" i "Vriska". Ova potonja je obrada svjetskog hita "Pop Music" grupe M. Bilo je tu još zanimljivih obrada kao što je "Nedim" obrada pjesme "Nadine" Chuck Berry-a I, "Palim se na guranje" u kojoj su dali svoje viđenje pjesme "Tumbling Dice" grupe The Rolling Stones. Sukcesivno su nakon toga objavljivali nove pjesme najavljujući novi album koji se do novembra 2022.godine nije pojavio.

Bombaj štampa also emerged from the New Primitivism movement. Originally, they were called Ševa, and the band's singer was Nedim Babović. But when Branko Đurić was kicked out from the band SCH, he was accepted by a new band that had changed its name to Bombaj štampa. However, Bombaj štampa had neither the patience nor persistence to push their project to actually record an album until 1988. The biggest reason for that was on their leader, singer Branko Đurić Đuro, whose theatre and movie work had slowed down his work with the band. Until their first album was released, the eponymous Bombaj štampa, they were known in local circles mainly for the songs "Željo" ("Željo Football Club") and "Džoging kroz Alipašino polje" ("Jogging through Alipašino Polje"). The appearance of the first album refreshed the scene. Two hits immediately stood out of the album: "Često poželim" ("I Often Wish For") and a cover of the old hit "Mali motorin" ("Small Moped"). Interestingly, the band members were against that song, but the producer convinced them to include it on the record. In memory of the late Dražen Ričl, the band recorded his song "Supermen," created during Ričl's collaboration with the band Elvis J. Kurtovich. In addition to the tandem Đuro-Nedo, the band included drummer Ademir Volić, bassist Neno Jeleč, keyboardist Nikša Bratoš, percussionist Miroslav Milošević and a brass section consisting of Goran Turkalj, Slobodan Randalović, Nebojša Šogorović and Rusmir Piknjač.

Their appearance restored the faith in a solid sound that was based on paying respect to The Rolling Stones. Nedo was a big fan of theirs and the next album Ja bolje letim sam (I Fly Better Alone) goes even one step further in this effort. They collaborated with members of the Croatian punk/pop band Psihomodo pop on the album, and Gobac and Đuro sang the song "Šarene ulice" ("Colorful Streets") together. One of Ričl's songs was again included in the album. This time it was the song "Kćerka jedinica" ("A Single Daughter"). Other songs worth mentioning from this album were: "Da li da" ("Should I?"), "Bolje letim sam" ("I Fly Better Alone"), and "Dubrovački trubaduri" ("Troubadours of Dubrovnik"). The latter would later be covered by Muha band (Fly band). On their second album, only Nedim Babović and Branko Đurić remained from the original lineup, while the new members were Dragan Bajić, Zoran Šerbedžija and Srđan Šerbedžija.

At the beginning of the war, they recorded two songs, "Kiša je prošla" ("The Rain Has Passed") and "Ovo je moja zemlja" ("This is My Country"), and then Đuro left for Slovenia due to health problems. Constant inquiries about reforming the band have led to their occasionally getting together to play beginning in the late 2000s. The band settled its lineup with old crew members Đurić, Babović, and Bajić; they were joined by the bassist Ernie Mendillo. They soon entered the recording studio to prepare a new album – which, as was their usual style, took some time to finish. It was finally released in autumn 2010, under the title Neka DJ odmah dole CJ (Let the DJ Come Down Right Now). The main singles were "Truba (The Trumpet)" and "Vriska (The Scream)." The latter was a cover of the world famous hit "Pop Music" by the band M. There were other interesting covers, such as "Nedim," a cover of Chuck Berry's "Nadine," and "Palim se na guranje," ("I get started when I'm pushed"), where they gave their take on the song "Tumbling Dice" by The Rolling Stones. After that, they successively released the new songs announcing a new album – which is yet to be released.
