Rock - Bijelo dugme

Bijelo dugme je ušlo u osamdesete kao posve novi sastav. Krajem 1980. godine pojavio se album Doživjeti stotu rađen u tada modernom "ska" maniru. Doživjeti stotu je bio njihov najslabije prodavani album. Ni turneja nije prošla mnogo bolje od ploče. Svirali su male klubove, radili su je svega četrdesetak dana, da bi je okončali koncertom u zagrebačkom "Kulušiću" 05. aprila 1981. Taj snimak je na njihovom drugom živom albumu 05. april 1981. Krajem 1982. godine Ipe Ivandić se vratio u sastav. Paralelno su pripremili dva albuma koji su se pojavili početkom naredne godine. Prva je bila ploča pjesama za djecu A milicija trenira strogoću koju je Bregović radio na stihove pjesnika Duška Trifunovića. Prvobitno je trebao pjevati Seid Memić Vajta, zvijezda tv emisije za djecu Nedeljni zabavnik. Kako je Vajta bio zauzet, pjevao je dječak Ratomir Boršić Rača. Neposredno nakon je izašao i "zvanični" album Uspavanka za Radmilu M.. Bregović je namjeravao da to bude njihov oproštaj. Na albumu je Kosovska, otpjevana na albanskom jeziku, a to se dešavalo nepune dvije godine nakon demonstracija na Kosovu, koje su, kako se kasnije ispostavilo bile tek početak krvavog raspleta jugoslovenske drame. Kasnije je Bebek izjavljivao da je zbog te pjesme napustio Bijelo dugme, a i zato što nije htio na narednoj ploči pjevati himnu "Hej, Slaveni". Niti je pjevao himnu, niti tu ploču.

Bebek je krajem 1983. godine snimio duet sa Zanom Nimani u pjesmi "Jabuke i vino". U proljeće naredne godine, na nagovor ljudi iz Zane" snimio je solo album Mene tjera neki vrag. Skoro na desetogodišnjicu izlaska prvog singla Bijelo dugmeta, 23. aprila 1984, zvanično je objavio da ih je napustio. Tada je malo ko vjerovao da je to i definitvni razlaz, pa je u to sumnjao i Alen Islamović kada ga je Bregović pozvao da im se priključi. Zato je Alen odlučio da ostane u matičnoj grupi Divlje jagode, a u ljeto 1984. godine u Dugme je došao Mladen Vojičić Tifa.

Kako bi pokazali da im počinje novo doba nazvali su album naprosto Bijelo dugme. Ploča je bila toliko jaka da su lako prebrodili promjenu pjevača. Tokom rada na albumu sa njima je snimio Laza Ristovski, da bi im se na turneji priključio kao punopravan član i ostao sa njima sve do gašenja grupe.

Turneja je bila trijumfalna. Ali tokom nje sve češće je dolazilo do sukoba između Bregovića i Tife. Očito Tifa nije mogao podnijeti iznenadni pritisak slave. Posezao je za alkoholom i narkoticima. Sa Dugmetom je posljednji put nastupio na Svjetskom festivalu omladine i studenata u Moskvi 2. avgusta 1985. godine. Ponovo se gotovo cijelu godinu ne zna ko će biti novi pjevač. U opticaju je ponovo Alen Islamović, a ova govorkanja se potvrđuju u jesen 1986. godine. Na novom albumu Pljuni i zapjevaj moja Jugoslavijo naslovna pjesma je zamišljena kao odgovor narastajućim nacionalizmima. U njoj su korišteni stihovi pjesnika Brane Miljkovića.

Koncerti koji su uslijedili oborili su rekorde svih dvorana u kojima su nastupali. Alen Islamović se odlično uklopio, a dio atmosfere sa te turneje zabilježen je i na dvostrukom albumu Mramor, kamen i željezo koji je objavljen 1987. godine. Ovaj album je pripremio i producirao Zoran Redžić. Krajem 1988. godine objavljen je njihov posljednji studijski album Ćiribiribela. Početkom naredne godine kreću na turneju koja je trebala trajati sve do 1. aprila, a bili su planirani nastupi po Kini i Sovjetskom Savezu. Međutim, nakon koncerta u Derventi 15. marta 1989. godine Islamović ih je napustio bez objašnjenja. Kasnije će tvrditi da se vratio u rodni Bihać zbog zdravstvenih problema. Mnogi su vjerovali kako je to samo prolazna kriza, ali pokazalo se da je to zapravo bio kraj.

Bregović je nastavio da radi filmsku muziku, oformio je Orkestar za svadbe i sahrane sa kojim uspješno nastupa po uglednim svjetskim koncertnim dvoranama, te je dugo odbijao bilo kakvu varijantu ponovnog okupljanja Bijelog dugmeta. Zoran Redžić je boravio jedno vrijeme u Finskoj gdje je radio kao kompozitor i producent. Po povratku u Sarajevo bio je jedan od začetnika stvaranja otvorene rock scene "Stage" na kojoj su nastupala mnoga znana imena.

Ipe Ivandić je u vrijeme rata u Bosni i Hercegovini boravio u Beogradu. U jednom trenutku nije više mogao izdržati i izvršio je samoubistvo mada postoje tumačenja da je ubijen ili da je nastradao nesretnim slučajem. Vlado Pravdić živi povučeno van estradnih tokova.

Bijelo dugme se još jednom okupilo za tri koncerta u Sarajevu, Zagrebu i Beogradu u junu 2005. godine. Na sceni su se uz Bregovića našli Zoran Redžić, Vlado Pravdić, Lazo Ristovski, Milić Vukašinović, Điđi Jankelić i sva tri pjevača. Sa ta tri koncerta objavljen je dvostruki album Turneja. Pjevačima se ovaj koncept dopao pa su nagovarali Bregovića da nastave. Kako ovaj to nije htio, sami su nastupali, ali se priča nakon par godina ugasila.
Bregović je ponovo okupio svoju verziju Bijelog dugmeta kako bi obilježio 40 godina rada i od 2014. godine nastupa sa trubačima, klapama, Alenom i Tifom i to zove Bijelim dugmetom. Objavljen je i koncertni album ove postave Ko ne poludi taj nije normalan.

Bijelo dugme entered the eighties as a completely new band. Towards the end of 1980 they released the album Doživjeti stout (To live to a hundred) recorded in, at that time, a modern ska style. Doživjeti stotu was their worst-selling album, and the promo tour did not fare much better than the record. They played small club venues, a total of just forty dates, finishing with a concert in Zagreb's "Kulušić" club on Aprilc5, 1981. That recording is on their second live album 05. april 1981. By the end of 1982, Ipe Ivandić rejoined the band. In parallel, they prepared two albums which appeared early the following year. The first was an LP of songs for children A milicija trenira strogoću (The militia is too rigorous) which Bregović wrote to accompany poems by Duško Trifunović. Initially, Seid Memić Vajta, star of a children's TV show Nedeljni zabavnik (Sunday funday) was supposed to sing. As Vajta was otherwise engaged, a boy called Ratomir Boršić Rača sang instead. Immediately after, the album Uspavanka za Radmilu M. (A lullaby for Radmila M.) was released. Bregović intended for it to be their farewell. The album contains "Kosovska", ("Kosovar song") sung in Albanian, a mere two years after the demonstrations in Kosovo, which, as it later transpired, were the beginning of the bloody end of Yugoslavia. Later, Bebek claimed that he left Bijelo dugme because of that song, but also because he did not wish to sing the national anthem Hej, Slaveni on the next album. He neither sang the anthem nor the songs on the next album.

Towards the end of 1983, Bebek recorded a duet with Zana Nimani – a song "Jabuke i vino" ("Apples and Wine"). In the spring of the following year, persuaded by people from Zana, he recorded a solo album - Mene tjera neki vrag (I'm Driven by some Devil). Almost on the tenth anniversary of the release of Bijelo Dugme's first single, on 23 April 1984, he officially announced his departure. At that time, very few people believed this was the definitive end of the band, not least Alen Islamović when Bregović asked him to join them. For that reason, Alen decided to remain in his original band Divlje jagode, and in the summer of 1984, Mladen Vojičić Tifa joined Dugme.

In order to show that a new era has dawned for them, their following album was called simply Bijelo dugme. The record was so solid that they overcame the lead singer's change with ease. During its recording, Laza Ristovski joined them in the studio. Subsequently, he joined them on tour as a full-fledged band member remaining with them up until the very end. The tour was a triumph. But throughout, altercations between Bregović and Tifa were more and more frequent. It was evident that Tifa could not cope with the pressure of sudden fame. He turned to alcohol and drugs. His last appearance with Dugme was at the World Festival of Youth and Students in Moscow on August 2, 1985. Once again, almost an entire year would pass before a new singer was confirmed. Once again Alen Islamović was in the game, and the rumors were finally confirmed in the autumn of 1986. On the new album Pljuni i zapjevaj moja Jugoslavijo (Spit and sing to my Yugoslavia) the title track is intended as a response to the ever-increasing nationalist sentiments. The song features verses by the poet Brane Miljković.

The concerts that followed beat the records of all the halls in which they performed. Alen Islamović proved to be an excellent fit, and part of the atmosphere from that tour is recorded on the double album Mramor, kamen i željezo (Marble, Stone and Iron) released in 1987. This album was prepared and produced by Zoran Redžić. Towards the end of 1988, their last studio album Ćiribiribela was released. Early the following year, they started a tour that should have lasted until April 1, with concerts planned throughout China and the USSR. However, after the concert in Derventa on March 15, 1989, Islamović left without explanation. Later, he would claim that he returned to his native Bihać due to health issues. Many believed that this was a temporary glitch, but it became obvious that this was in fact the end.

Bregović continued to work on soundtracks for films, and he formed the Orchestra for weddings and funerals, performing with success in renowned concert halls worldwide, and persistently rejecting the idea of a Bijelo dugme reunion. Zoran Redžić spent some time in Finland where he worked as a composer and producer. Upon his return to Sarajevo, he was one of the initiators of the open rock scene "Stage" which featured many well-known names.

During the war in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Ipe Ivandić was in Belgrade. At some point, he could no longer cope, and he committed suicide, although some say that he was murdered or lost his life accidentally. Vlado Pravdić leads a quiet life, well out of the public eye.

Bijelo dugme reunited once again, playing three concerts in Sarajevo, Zagreb, and Belgrade in June 2005. Bregović was joined on stage by Zoran Redžić, Vlado Pravdić, Lazo Ristovski, Milić Vukašinović, Điđi Jankelić, and all three lead singers. These three concerts resulted in a double album titled Turneja (The Tour). The singers liked the concerts, so they tried to persuade Bregović to carry on. As he refused, they continued to perform without him, but a couple of years down the line this was over.
Once again, Bregović assembled his own take on Bijelo dugme in order to mark their fortieth anniversary, and since 2014 he performs with brass bands, Dalmatian-style "klapa" ensembles, Alen and Tifa, which is what he calls Bijelo dugme. A concert album of this line-up entitled, Who is not crazy is not normal was released in 2016.