Objavili su jedan album.

Most/Rondo

Most/Rondo – Mostarske rock zvijezde koji su lokalne okvire nadrasli baladom "Plave oči". Tu pjesmu je s njima prvobitno otpjevao Vedran Vegar. Glavni čovjek sastava je bio Mirko Meštrović, a uz njega su tu još bili Goran Jovanović Jolta, Nikola Perović i Dragan Grgić. Ta postava je snimila jedini album grupe Rondo, album Diskofobija iz 1980.godine. Nakon albuma došlo je do sukoba u grupi pa Meštrović napušta grupu i sa sobom odnosi ime. Pobjeda na gitarijadi u Zaječaru 1980.godine omogućila im je snimanje prvog singla. Početkom 1982.godine gitarista Branko Dabić odlazi, a na mjesto gitariste iz Sarajeva je došao Mladen Pavičić Pava. Baron i Crna ovca (Baron and the Black Sheep) was one of the many incarnations of vocalist Sejo Bajraktarević. At the end of the 80s he led the band, which produced two albums. Damir Arslanagić (keyboards), Keno Mešanović (guitar), Š. Husaković (bass), S. Popović (guitar) and Denis Habul (drums) joined him on the first album. Amir "Lazy" Bešo joined the band following the release of their first album.

Carski rez (The Caesarians) was a hard rock band from Sarajevo formed by Šefćet Hodža, the bassist of Vatreni poljubac (Fiery Kiss), after he left that band. The very popular Sarajevo guitarist Amir "Lazy" Bešo joined him, along with Jasminko Zubanović, Velibor Rajačić and singer Enes Mulahasanović. The band lasted just long enough to release a single album.

Džeremi (Jeremy) was a band formed by Huska Skalinić, who previously played with Ponoćna svjetla (Midnight Lights) together with Fadil Šabović, who would later form the band, Nervozni poštar (The Nervous Postman). In addition, Džemo Novaković, who was a member of many famous Sarajevo pop rock bands, sang and played in Džeremi, with Dževad Šerifović and Izo Kolečić. Izo would be later known as the regular drummer of Hari Mata Hari. Džeremi released just one album.

Leptir (Butterfly) from Sanski Most performed in a TV competition in the late 70s where demo bands competed for the opportunity to record an LP. Leptir won, giving them the opportunity to record some of their songs. The members were Dragan Mutić, Sead Delkić, Edin Gradinčić and Predrag Vidović. Vidović and Mutić were the writing pair for all the songs in their first and only album Šipak (Rose hip), released in 1981.

The band Mona Liza was one of the most ambitious projects of the Sarajevo rock scene in the second half of the 80s. They were formed in 1986, and the group included Dražen Vrdoljak (who performed under the stage name Ser Jean and should not be confused with the famous rock publicist from Zagreb), Mirko Manojlov, Điđi Jankelić and Branko Maksimović. They released one album.

Most/Rondo ("The Bridge"/ "Rondo/Roundabout") – These Mostar rock stars showed they had outgrown the local scene with their ballad, "Plave oči" ("Blue Eyes"). That song was originally sung with the band by Vedran Vegar. The band changed its name to Rondo at the end of the 70s, with Mile Zovko from Pazarić (outside Sarajevo) taking over as a singer. The band's main man was Mirko Meštrović; other members included Goran Janković Jolta, Nikola Perović and Dragan Grgić. This line-up recorded their only LP, Discophobia, in 1980. Following the record's release, there was a conflict among the band members, so Meštrović left and took the band name with him. The rest of the band returned under the name Most and strengthened its composition with Senad Trnovac on drums. They continued as a trio. This line-up released the album Klizavi provod (Slippery Fun) in 1982.

The band Negra was one of the many incarnations of Sejo Bajraktarević – who probably founded the most bands in the history of the Bosnia and Herzegovina music scene. The band was named after Sejo's spouse, Negra Bajraktarević, who was previously known as the singer of the band Radio, when her maiden name was Bulbulija. In addition to the two of them, the band included Amir "Lazy" Bešo, a guitarist who played with almost all of the significant Sarajevo bands during his career before making a solo career in the USA, along with drummer Šukrija Arslanagić, who would later become a regular member of Nervozni poštar (Nervous Postman). They released only one album, Ljubav na rock'n'roll način (Love in a Rock'n'Roll Way).

The first line-up consisted of Željko Selak, who sang, played keyboards and wrote songs, Ešref Hamzić Eško, Branko Dabić Daba, and Nenad Simić Sima. Their victory at the guitar competition in Zaječar (Serbia) in 1980 provided them with the chance to record their first single. At the beginning of 1982, guitarist Branko Dabić left the band, and his replacement was Mladen Pavičić Pava from Sarajevo. Pava, however, soon accepted an offer to return to Plavi orkestar (Blue Orchestra), so Vlado Kalajdžić became the band's new guitarist. They also changed their bassist in 1983, when Goran Grozdić Moca replaced Nenad Simić, who had left for his military service. They released one album.

Kotrljajuće kamenje (The Rolling Stones) – This band's name shows that it was created under the strong influence of The Rolling Stones. They were formed at the end of the eighties and their only hit was actually a Stones cover, "Sad Sad Sad," which they performed as "Neka drugom je da" ("Someone else is here"). Edvin Žigić and Boriša Brkić formed the band, and then they gathered some experienced musicians from the Sarajevo scene – Slaven Vulić, who previously played with Gino Banana, and Nermin Dedić Fićo, the former bassist of the band Elvis J. Kurtovich. Neđo Đurić played drums. Their only album, Samo je ljubav (It's Just love), was released in 1990.
